“ In 2018 I knew her on the ship trip to an island near LA whose name is legendary: Avalon isle.

She was with his beloved husband Andy and they welcomed me together as a son: i, like a son, knew them and appreciated them so much that I returned to the USA in 2018, before the hateful COVID period, to find them in NYC with my daughter Teresa, as they had invited us. They welcomed me back home as a son and my daughter as a beloved granddaughter. During the pandemic, we kept in touch by email and she was worried about me, as an emergency doctor, that i was fighting on the front lines against the damn virus. In one of these latest epistolary communications, Ewa told me that her beloved husband Andy had suddenly passed away in his sleep during the night... This filled me with sadness as well as the fact that she also told me that he had been diagnosed with the nasty evil that, unfortunately, eventually took it away from us all. My daughter and I remember them with as much affection as now is the sadness of knowing that they are no longer there. We miss so much their friendly smiles and their benevolent and foresighted words: we always remember with sympathy Andy's never warning to get off at the subway station in Jamaica Station because it could be really dangerous for the uncommendable presences in that place. We still smile for that advice really... paternal and concerned for our safety. We will always remember them together, as the last time we said goodbye, trusting that we can return the hospitality in Italy as soon as possible... Unfortunately, the damn pandemic and everything that happened during and after it separated us forever. We will meet again one day, however, and it will be, as in life, a return to the Family... goodbye, my friends, see you a day... a night
